

Policy

Seanasol Research asserts its ownership for original content published on seanasol.org and seanasol.com, and it is committed to openly sharing creative content with the wider community for the purposes of research, education, non-commercial and commercial applications.

Content generated and published by Seanasol Research is subject to U.K. and some international copyright laws in accordance with international agreements. Users of this website should frequently refer to the Policy notice and check if terms of copyright have changed. Seanasol Research reserves the right to amend or withdraw Media Content policies.

Seanasol Research strongly encourages its audience wishing to use and/or distribute creative media presented on this website to directly contact Public Relations. By requesting access to content for the purpose of re-use or distribution you are agreeing to the terms below.

Your rights

1. You can download, edit and/or distribute original content generated by Seanasol Research.

Attribution You must clearly reference each piece of material obtained from Seanasol Research (includes images, quotes and written articles) by quoting “Copyright Seanasol Research”, the date, the title of the media accessed (if available), the name of the original author (if available) and the link to the original creation.

Commercial You may use content for commercial purposes by requesting permission and attributing to Seanasol Research and/or the original author. Be advised that content produced by Seanasol Research is labelled as general information and you should not rely on it for the purpose of making business and/or legal decisions. Any attempt to do so will be at your own risk and Seanasol Research will not accept responsibility for loss of business and/or loss of profits.

Non-Commercial You may freely use original content generated by Seanasol Research for non-commercial, education or research purposes subject to proper attribution given where appropriate.

Derivatives You may edit, transform and/or build upon original content in a way that suits your application. By doing so, you must clearly indicate where changes have been made and reference the original author.

Restrictions You may not use our content for applications that strongly deviate from our values, strategies and/or industry and must not be used to target a specific race, religion, social group or ideology. You must not use our original content knowingly alongside plagiarised material.

Some content published on our website has been obtained under the Creative Commons Licence and Seanasol Research does not own that media. Make sure you reference media appropriately.